* A defendant may be named in an individual or official capacity, or both. To sue a defendant in their individual capacity, you must be able to state facts showing that the defendant was actually involved in violating your rights. A suit against a defendant in their official capacity is in reality a suit against the office or position the defendant holds. Only injunctive relief is available in an official capacity suit against a state official. This is because the Eleventh Amendment confers immunity upon the state or its officials against monetary damages resulting from federal court litigation.

"Color of law" refers to whether the person is a private party or an employee, official, or agent of a state, county, city, or the federal government. There can be no civil rights action under § 1983 unless the defendant was "acting under color of law." After the color of law requirement is met, then it must be determined in which capacity the defendant is being sued.

(If you would like to name additional defendants, make a copy of this (blank) page and provide the necessary information.)

* A defendant may be named in an individual or official capacity, or both. To sue a defendant in their individual capacity, you must be able to state facts showing that the defendant was actually involved in violating your rights. A suit against a defendant in their official capacity is in reality a suit against the office or position the defendant holds. Only injunctive relief is available in an official capacity suit against a state official. This is because the Eleventh Amendment confers immunity upon the state or its officials against monetary damages resulting from federal court litigation.

"Color of law" refers to whether the person is a private party or an employee, official, or agent of a state, county, city, or the federal government. There can be no civil rights action under § 1983 unless the defendant was "acting under color of law." After the color of law requirement is met, then it must be determined in which capacity the defendant is being sued.
